Course Objectives:

Urdu is one of the important modern Indian languages. Not far away, it was given the status of one of the official languages in India. Until the end of the twentieth century, Urdu has been under great attention. The Urdu language vis-a-vis other Indian languages is deeply rooted in Indian history, culture, and civilization. Libraries and archives in India are testimony of this fact. Hindi, which is one of the most debated languages in India, has been associated with Urdu in terms of its inception. They are like twin sisters. Despite different scripts adopted by Hindi and Urdu, both languages have an intricate relationship and common heritage of folk literature. Many books have been written in both the languages, i.e., Urdu and Hindi. The only significant difference between these languages is that one of them is written in Devanagari, while another one, i.e., Urdu in Urdu script. Under this backdrop, those students who are researching Hindi can trace the cultural heritage in the Urdu language. Some students and scholars long to learn the Urdu language. However, because of the scarcity of resources and time, they are deprived of learning the Urdu language.

In this part of India where our university is located there is a huge number of people who can speak Urdu. But as they do not know Urdu script they are not capable of reading and writing the Urdu language. If the Department of Indian Languages is given this opportunity to take Urdu learning by Urdu Open Elective Course, those students who are interested in learning it would be greatly benefitted. Urdu has been given the status of one of the official languages of the state of Bihar. Here people who know Urdu is given preference in the government offices, Educational Institutes, and media houses. This is a reality that those who are involved in Hindi and English journalism but do not know Urdu face a plethora of problems. Such professionals are interested in learning, speaking, and writing Urdu. One of the reasons being the role of Urdu in improving pronunciation, and in making language and presentation skills very refined. This course has been designed to keep this aspect in
